

Hazard Communication (HAZCOM) Training Program

HOOT HAZCOM

Approximately 60 percent of all hospital employees have possible occupational exposures to hazardous chemicals. Often, limited resources require HAZCOM program managers to identify and train these employees and their supervisors first. One method of identifying possibly exposed employees is to conduct a hospital-wide survey. During the survey, there are three main questions HAZCOM program managers should ask:

◆ Are there any hazardous chemicals stored/used in the work area? (Ask to see the hazardous chemical inventory.)

◆ How are these hazardous chemicals used? (Ask supervisors and employees to describe their jobs or ask to see any completed job safety analyses.)

◆ Who uses these hazardous chemicals? (Ask supervisors to tell you the names of employees who work with the hazardous chemicals.)

Note: HAZCOM program managers can speed up the identification process by carrying along a current copy of the hospital's personnel information roster. Supervisors can then simply point out the names or the job titles of the employees having possible exposures.

The following tables describe the work areas and job titles of hospital employees who usually require HAZCOM training. This information will vary based on the size of the hospital, the types of healthcare services provided, and individual employees' job duties.
